

Councillor Biography: NIGEL COLTMAN

General information about myself:

I've lived in Hailsham since 1986 and, with my wife Sandra, raised our four sons who have now left the nest. I've had several different occupations, but since 1992, ran a data management company until retirement.

Why I chose to become a town councillor:

I saw things in the town that needed attention. I was also concerned about house building that did not seem to come alongside the necessary public services.

What my priorities are for Hailsham in my role as councillor:

I work in partnership with the district and county councils to improve Hailsham as a positive place to live and work; get the new post office up and running in the High Street; work with Wealden District Council to redevelop the town centre.

Other information: